

DCCDPro

This is a review for DCCDPro (www.dccdpro.com). After swapping my transmission for a Version 7 JDM STi 6-speed, I quickly started to desire the DCCD function. While the market isn't the largest, I was left with a few options. Other than the large market-share and one of the best-accepted controllers, I also found that people seemed to have stellar satisfaction with the service that they received from DCCDPro. On top of that, they seemed to be very open, descriptive, and responsive to the Subaru forums.

I purchased the Universal controller from DCCDPro, complete with OEM STi switches, and STi Gauge Cluster output controls. The transaction went smoothly, and I was very anxious while I waited for the controller to arrive. But things didn't go smoothly much longer.

When I received my box, I was a little confused when I didn't see all the wiring that should have been there. I contacted DCCDPro, and they informed me that I purchased the wrong product. I was able to produce the receipt of payment and prove that I did, in fact, purchase the correct, full controller. The representative was very helpful and apologetic at this point, explaining that there was a server error.

He instructed me to return the current item, and they would me the correct one in the mail. Jeff had personally stepped in at this point, and sent me information for return. I had to pay for the return upfront, but was re-assured that I would be reimbursed, along with a $50 store credit, and $50 off my purchase.

I felt better as a customer, and going forward I had no issues. The install instructions were very easy to understand, and provided some good information for understanding the process of install and use. I was able to install the entire unit in a few hours nicely, soldering and taping everything.

I admit I had my doubts when purchasing, of how much a difference this product could make, but this is now one of my favorite products of my entire build. You can feel the differential binding under full lock (as it should), and going around corners, especially on-ramps, has become an entirely different experience. I recommend this product for the change it will make to your drivetrain, but also for the promise you will get from Jeff and DCCDPro.
